

Catella sponsors youth tennis talents

Catella has become a principal sponsor of Good to Great Tennis Academy to assist young talents with the aim of restoring Sweden to world leadership in tennis.

Good to Great Tennis Academy and Catella have today announced a three-year sponsorship agreement. Catella has become a principal sponsor of Good to Great, creating opportunities for a team effort in which young tennis talents are able to achieve their full potential through training at Good to Great Tennis Academy and travelling with their coaches to international tournaments. In addition, a Catella scholarship will be instituted to provide tennis talents from all over Sweden with the opportunity to develop through training at Good to Great Tennis Academy.

"The partnership with Catella allows us to provide promising young talents with the opportunity to develop into global stars. Our goal is to regain our position as one of the world's leading tennis nations. Catella is an ideal partner for us, and fully embraces the opportunities offered by sponsorship through Catella's history in tennis and genuine commitment," says Nicklas Kulti, Partner at Good to Great.

"Catella has sponsored Swedish tennis talents for more than 15 years, and our team effort has fostered global players like Robin Söderling and Joachim "Pim Pim" Johansson. We have been involved with Good to Great right from the start, and we are proud to be part of their long-term efforts to develop young talents so that they can realise their dreams. We also share the values on which Good to Great is founded," says Ann Charlotte Svensson, Head of Communications at Catella.

Team Catella already includes the female tennis players Rebecca Peterson and Jacqueline Cabaj Awad. This investment is now being expanded with three promising male players, Karl Friberg, Jonas Eriksson Ziverts and Filip Malbasic.
